Officials in Mexico are believed to be fully cognizant that only by the conduct of a free election will recognition be extended by the United States. There is a possibility, too, that this country might ask other nations was widely discussed to-day in diplomatic circles. The administration is taking more than a passive interest in the definant ciposition by the majority of the Mexican Congress to the appointment of Eduardo Tamaz, one of the leaders of the Catholic party, to the Ministry of Public Instruction. The opening of a fleat by the Liberals in Congress to repress the influence of the Catholic party in governmental affairs is looked upon here as likely to force a crisis and to reawaken an issue of the catholic party of the Mexican propriety of the Mexican people would never brook a Mexican people would never brook a matter lection.

of other government officials, including Federico Gamboa, Mexican Foreign Minister, suggested as the probable choice of the Catholic party.

The effect of these promises, though not made in diplomatic channels, is likely to be of considerable importance, as there is a growing tendency in Europe from information received in Washington to act hereafter in accordance with the United States, awaiting her action before extending recognitions. In the life of Southern republics.

Constitutionalists here declare the Mexican people would never brook a return of the church to a share in the government, and they view the proposal of Huerta to place Tamartz in the Department of Instruction as virtually turning over the educational system of the country to the clergy.

These say that Cardenas was murdered in Micheacan, whither he had been sent by General Huerta to com-mand Federal troops.

At the Carranza headquarters it is suspected that Cardenas was killed by an agent of the present Mexican administration so that he would be unable to reveal the orders he received on the night of February 22 when Madero was conveyed from the National Palace in Mexico City to prison.

Cardenas was in charge of the automobile that was carrying the deposed President and sat directly behind Madero. Investigation of the latter's death showed that he was killed by a bullet that entered the back of his head and came out of the forehead. Administration officials awaited to-
